The measurement of efficiency in school studies by means of objective tests is one of the most needed achievements in the interest of the schools. Happily, quite a number of investigators interested in the scientific study of educational problems are working in this field. This monograph contains the test material, the instructions for administering the tests, and the instructions for scoring the results of the tests in four school subjects. These tests have been performed thus far on approximately 10,000 pupils in forty-two schools in twelve cities located in four states: Wisconsin, Minnesota, New York, and West Virginia. On the basis of these tests, tentative standard scores of attainment to be reached at the end of each school year have been computed. Any school, grade or pupil may be tested and the performance may then be compared with the standard curves or standard scores.

A critical discussion of the technique and the reliability of the tests, together with the results obtained thus far will be presented in the Journal of Educational Psychology for January, February, and March, 1915. The author hopes that others may assist in applying the tests. Test blanks may be obtained from the author who will be glad to cooperate in the use of the tests and to receive results for verifying or modifying the present standard scores.

I. READING TESTS

Instructions for Administering and Scoring the Reading Tests.

Giving the tests. Explain to the pupils that they are to read silently as rapidly as they can and at the same time to grasp as much as they can, and that they will be asked to write down, not necessarily in the same words, as much as they will remember of what they read.

They should also be told not to read anything over again but to read on continuously as rapidly as is consistent with grasping what they read.

Use for a given grade the test blank that bears the same number as your grade. For example, use number 4 with the fourth grade, number 5 with the fifth grade, etc. On the next day repeat the test in the same manner but use the blank of the next grade below yours, that is, in the fourth grade use number 3, in the fifth grade use number 4, etc. (For high school and college students, blanks number 8 and 9, or 7 and 9, may be used.)

The blanks for the test should be distributed to the pupils with the backs of the blanks up, so that no one will be able to read any of the material until all are ready. Then give the signal "turn" and "start." Allow them to read exactly thirty seconds. Then have the pupils make a mark with a pencil after the last word read to indicate how far they have read.

Then have them turn the blanks over immediately and write on the back all that they remember having read. Allow as much time as they need, but make sure that they do not copy from each other, or turn the blank over to see the text. Finally have them fill out the spaces at the bottom of the blank.

N. B. Make sure of allowing exactly 30 seconds for the reading. See that they all start and stop at the same time.

Scoring the tests. The speed of reading is determined by ascertaining the number of words read per second. This can be done very rapidly by having a blank on which is indicated the number of words to the end of each line. By this blank the total number of words read can be determined almost instantaneously. Dividing by thirty will give the speed of reading per second.

The comprehension is determined by counting the number of words written which correctly reproduce the thought. The written account must be carefully read and all words which either reproduce incorrectly the ideas of the test passage, or add ideas not in the test, or repeat ideas previously recorded, are crossed out. The remaining words are then counted and used as the index of comprehension. The average of the two tests is taken as the final score. On an average based on many tests it will be found that about seven per cent of the words have to be discarded. In many papers nothing will have to be discarded.

Once there was a little girl who lived with her mother.

They were very poor.

Sometimes they had no supper.

Then they went to bed hungry.

One day the little girl went into the woods.

She wanted sticks for the fire.

She was so hungry and sad!

“Oh, I wish I had some sweet porridge!” she said.

“I wish I had a pot full for mother and me. We could eat it all up.”

Just then she saw an old woman with a little black pot.

She said, “Little girl, why are you so sad?”

“I am hungry,” said the little girl.

Betty lived in the South, long, long ago. She was only ten years old, but she liked to help her mother.

She had learned to do many things. She could knit and sew and spin; but best of all she liked to cook.

One day Betty was alone at home because her father and mother and brother had gone to town to see a wonderful sight.

The great George Washington was visiting the South. He was going from town to town, riding in a great white coach trimmed with shining gold. It had leather curtains, and soft cushions. Four milk-white horses drew it along the road.

Four horsemen rode ahead of the coach to clear the way and four others rode behind it. They were all dressed in white and gold.

Little Abe hurried home as fast as his feet could carry him. Perhaps if he had worn stockings and shoes like yours he could have run faster. But, instead, he wore deerskin leggings and clumsy moccasins of bear skin that his mother had made for him.

Such a funny little figure as he was, hurrying along across the rough fields! His suit was made of war homespun cloth. His cap was made of coonskin, and the tail of the coon hung behind him, like a furry tassel.

But if you could have looked into the honest, twinkling blue eyes of this little lad of long ago, you would have liked him at once.

In one hand little Abe held something very precious. It was only a book, but little Abe thought more of that book than he would have thought of gold or precious stones.

You cannot know just what that book meant to little Abe, unless you are very fond of reading. Think how it would be to see no books except two or three old ones that you had read over and over until you knew them by heart!

The red squirrel usually waked me in the dawn, running over the roof and up and down the sides of the house, as if sent out of the woods for this very purpose.

In the course of the winter I threw out half a bushel of ears of sweet corn onto the snow crust by my door, and was amused by watching the motions of the various animals which were baited by it. All day long the red squirrels came and went, and afforded me much entertainment by their maneuvers.

One would approach, at first, warily through the shrub-oaks, running over the snow crust by fits and starts like a leaf blown by the wind. Now he would go a few paces this way, with wonderful speed, making haste with his "trotters" as if it were for a wager; and now as many paces that way, but never getting on more than half a rod at a time.

Then suddenly he would pause with a ludicrous expression and a somerset, as if all eyes in the universe were fixed on him. Then, before you could say Jack Robinson, he would be in the top of a young pitch-pine, winding up his clock and talking to all the universe at the same time.

Once upon a time, there lived a very rich man, and a king besides, whose name was Midas; and he had a little daughter, whom nobody but myself ever heard of, and whose name I either never knew, or have entirely forgotten. So, because I love odd names for little girls, I choose to call her Marygold.

This King Midas was fonder of gold than anything else in the world. He valued his royal crown chiefly because it was composed of that precious metal. If he loved anything better, or half so well, it was the one little maiden who played so merrily around her father's footstool. But the more Midas loved his daughter, the more did he desire and seek for wealth. He thought, foolish man! that the best thing he could possibly do for his dear child would be to give her the immensest pile of yellow, glistening coin, that had ever been heaped together since the world was made. Thus, he gave all his thoughts and all his time to this one purpose. If ever he happened to gaze for an instant at the goldtinted clouds of sunset, he wished that they were real gold, and that they could be squeezed safely into his strong box. When little Marygold ran to meet him, with a bunch of buttercups and dandelions, he used to say, "Poh, poh, child! If these flowers were as golden as they look, they would be worth the plucking!"

And yet, in his earlier days, before he was so entirely possessed of this insane desire for riches, King Midas had shown a great taste for flowers.

In a secluded and mountainous part of Stiria there was in old time a valley of the most surprising and luxuriant fertility. It was surrounded on all sides by steep and rocky mountains, rising into peaks which were always covered with snow, and from which a number of torrents descended in constant cataracts. One of these fell westward over the face of a crag so high that, when the sun had set to everything else, and all below was darkness, his beams still shone full upon this waterfall, so that it looked like a shower of gold. It was, therefore, called by the people of the neighborhood, the Golden River. It was strange that none of these streams fell into the valley itself. They all descended on the other side of the mountains, and wound away through broad plains and past populous cities. But the clouds were drawn so constantly to the snowy hills, and rested so softly in the circular hollow, that in time of drought and heat, when all the country round was burnt up, there was still rain in the little valley; and its crops were so heavy and its hay so high, and its apples so red, and its grapes so blue, and its wine so rich, and its honey so sweet, that it was a marvel to everyone who beheld it, and was commonly called the Treasure Valley.

The whole of this little valley belonged to three brothers called Schwartz, Hans and Gluck. Schwartz and Hans, the two elder brothers, were very ugly men, with overhanging eyebrows and small dull eyes.

Captain John Hull was the mint-master of Massachusetts, and coined all the money that was made there. This was a new line of business, for in the earlier days of the colony the current coinage consisted of gold and silver money of England, Portugal, and Spain. These coins being scarce, the people were often forced to barter their commodities instead of selling them.

For instance, if a man wanted to buy a coat, he perhaps exchanged a bearskin for it. If he wished for a barrel of molasses, he might purchase it with a pile of pine boards. Musket-bullets were used instead of farthings. The Indians had a sort of money called wampum, which was made of clam-shells, and this strange sort of specie was likewise taken in payment of debts by the English settlers. Bank-bills had never been heard of. There was not money enough of any kind, in many parts of the country, to pay the salaries of the ministers, so that they sometimes had to take quintals of fish, bushels of corn, or cords of wood instead of silver or gold.

As the people grew more numerous and their trade one with another increased, the want of current money was still more sensibly felt. To supply the demand the general court passed a law for establishing a coinage of shillings, sixpences, and threepences. Captain John Hull was appointed to manufacture this money, and was to have about one shilling out of every twenty to pay him for the trouble of making them.

The years went on, and Ernest ceased to be a boy. He had grown to be a young man now. He attracted little notice from the other inhabitants of the valley; for they saw nothing remarkable in his way of life, save that, when the labor of the day was over he still loved to go apart and gaze and meditate upon the Great Stone Face. According to their idea of the matter, it was a folly, indeed, but pardonable, inasmuch as Ernest was industrious, kind, and neighborly, and neglected no duty for the sake of indulging this idle habit. They knew not that the Great Stone Face had become a teacher to him, and that the sentiment which was expressed in it would enlarge the young man's heart, and fill it with wider and deeper sympathies than other hearts. They knew not that thence would come a better wisdom than could be learned from books, and a better life than could be moulded on the defaced example of other human lives. Neither did Ernest know that the thoughts and affections which came to him so naturally, in the fields and at the fireside, and wherever he communed with himself, were of a higher tone than those which all men shared with him.

By this time poor Mr. Gathergold was dead and buried; and the oddest part of the matter was, that his wealth, which was the body and spirit of his existence, had disappeared before his death, leaving nothing of him but a living skeleton, covered over with a wrinkled, yellow skin. Since the melting away of his gold, it had been very generally conceded that there was no such striking resemblance, after all, betwixt the ignoble features of the ruined merchant and that majestic face upon the mountainside.

To an American visiting Europe, the long voyage he has to make is an excellent preparative. The temporary absence of worldly scenes and employments produces a state of mind peculiarly fitted to receive new and vivid impressions. The vast space of waters that separates the hemispheres is like a blank page in existence. There is no gradual transition, by which, as in Europe, the features and population of one country blend almost imperceptibly with those of another. From the moment you lose sight of the land you have left, all is vacancy until you step on the opposite shore, and are launched at once into the bustle and novelties of another world.

In traveling by land there is a continuity of scene and a connected succession of persons and incidents, that carry on the story of life, and lessen the effect of absence and separation. We drag, it is true, "a lengthening chain," at each remove of our pilgrimage; but the chain is unbroken: we can trace it back link by link; and we feel that the last still grapples us to home. But a wide sea voyage severs us at once. It makes us conscious of being cast loose from the secure anchorage of settled life, and sent adrift upon a doubtful world. It interposes a gulf, not merely imaginary, but real, between us and our homes—a gulf subject to tempest, and fear, and uncertainty, rendering distance palpable, and return precarious.

Such, at least, was the case with myself. As I saw the last blue line of my native land fade away like a cloud in the horizon, it seemed as if I had closed one volume of the world and its concerns, and had time for meditation, before I opened another.

Grades	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
Speed (words read per second)	1.5	1.8	2.1	2.4	2.8	3.2	3.6	4.0
Comprehension (words written)	15	20	24	28	33	38	45	50

II. WRITING TESTS

Instructions for Administering and Scoring the Writing Tests

Giving the tests.—Explain to the pupils that they are to write repeatedly the line "Mary had a little lamb" as well as they can and as rapidly as they can during the two minutes that will be allowed for the writing.

Explain also that they are to write continuously and to make no erasures or corrections.

The pupils are to write with pen and ink on ruled paper. Before making the test have the pupils write at the top of the sheet the name, grade, school, city, and the date.

When all are ready have them hold their pens up in the air and then give the signal "start." Allow them exactly two minutes to write over as many times as they can "Mary had a little lamb." Both speed and quality of writing count in this test.

If desired, a different sentence may be use insted of "Mary had a little lamb." The sentence must not contain more than five to seven words which must all be familiar to the children. The pupils, however, must not have received specific previous drill upon it. The sentence "Art is long and time is fleeting" has been found suitable.

N. B. Make sure of allowing exactly 2 minutes. See that all start and stop at the same time.

Scoring the test.—The samples of writing are scored for speed and quality. The speed of writing is determined by ascertaining the number of letters written per minute. Count the total number of letters written and divide by two.

The quality is measured with the Thorndikee scale (or if preferred with the Ayres scale), by what is called the ascending-descending procedure. That is, a group of thirty or forty samples is taken and each one is graded by beginning at the lower end of the scale and ascending until the quality is reached to which the sample is judged equal. After the entire group has been rated in this manner, each sample is judged again by beginning at the upper end of the scale and descending until equivalence is reached. One should, of course, not know or see what the first measurement was, so as to have two independent measurements. The average of these two determinations is taken as the final measurement.

III. SPELLING TESTS

Instructions for Administering and Scoring the Spelling Tests

Giving the tests.—First, have the pupils write the name, grade, school, city, and date at the top of the sheet.

Pronounce the words clearly but do not sound them phonetically or inflect them so as to aid the pupils. Give the meaning of words that sound like other words of a different meaning and spelling. The pupils are to write the words and to number them in the order in which they are given. Allow sufficient time for the writing.

Each grade is to be tested twice, once on each of two successive days. Use any one of the six lists on the first day and any one of the others on the second day. (When an entire school is being tested it may be desirable, though not necessary, to use on the first day the same list, say list 1, in all grades and any other list on the second day.)

In the first grade use the first 40 words of the list, in the second grade use the first 65 words, in the third grade use the first 80 words, in the fourth grade use the first 90 words, and in all other grades use the entire list.

Scoring the tests.—The tests are scored by checking off all words spelled incorrectly and then counting the number of words spelled correctly. This number is the score and also the percentage of words correct, since the lists contain 100 words each. An average is taken of the scores made in the two tests which is the final score for each pupil. Omitted words are counted as incorrect. Words that may be spelled in different ways are counted correct if they are spelled according to any one of the permissible ways.

IV. ENGLISH TESTS.

Instructions for Administering and Scoring the English Tests.

Giving the Tests.—Give the tests in the order in which they are numbered. Distribute the test sheets with the backs of the sheets up. Read and explain the instructions to the pupils before each test, calling particular attention to the abbreviations that are used in each test. Allow three minutes for each of tests 1 to 4 and fifteen minutes for test 5.

The pupils should not be allowed to skip about but use the material of each test consecutively.

When you are ready to make a test give the signal "turn" and "start." Be careful to allow exactly the allotted time and make sure that all pupils start and stop at the same time.

In schools where different terminology has been taught, as for example for the tenses, the teacher should have the pupils use appropriate abbreviations for the terminology taught.

Scoring the tests.—Test 1. Cross off all words whose parts of speech are indicated incorrectly. Count the number of words correctly designated. This will be the score.

Test 2. Cross off the nouns and pronouns whose cases are indicated incorrectly. Count the number marked correctly. This will be the score.

Test 3. Cross off all tenses and modes given incorrectly. Each tense and each mode given correctly counts as one. Thus every verb form for which both are given correctly counts as two. The total number correctly indicated is the score.

Test 4. Cross off all punctuation marks inserted incorrectly. Count the number placed correctly. Every mark counts as one. In case of quotation marks, the one at the beginning and the one at the end count each as one. The total number inserted correctly is taken as the score.

Test 5. Check off all sentences marked incorrectly. A sentence is considered incorrect if both alternatives are underscored as right or if the correct alternative is crossed off. The total number of sentences marked correctly is the score.

Keys for scoring these tests may be obtained from the author.

ENGLISH TEST 1. SCORE_____

Maggie's eyes had begun to sparkle and her cheeks to flush—she was really beginning to instruct the gypsies and gaining great influence over them. The gypsies themselves were not without amazement at this talk, though their attention was divided by the contents of Maggie's pocket, which the friend at her right hand by this time emptied without attracting her notice.

"Is that where you live, my little lady?" said the old woman at the mention of Columbus.

"Oh, no! said Maggie, with some pity; "Columbus was a very wonderful man who found out half the world, and they put chains on him and treated him very badly, you know—its in my catechism of geography but perhaps it's rather too long to tell before tea."

"Yes, my home is pretty, and I'm very fond of the river where we go fishing; but I'm often very unhappy. I should have liked to bring my books with me, but I came away in a hurry, you know. But I can tell you almost everything there is in my books, I've read them so many times, and that will amuse you. And I can tell you something about geography, too—that's about the world we live in—very useful and interesting."

nominative—n possessive—p, objective—o,

After crossing the gully and walking on through the woods for what they thought a safe distance, they turned into the path. They were talking very merrily about the General and Hugh and their friend Mills, and were discussing some romantic plan for the recapture of their horses from the enemy, when they came out of the path into the road, and found themselves within twenty yards of a group of Federal soldiers, quietly sitting on their horses, evidently guarding the road.

“Where are you boys going?” he asked, as he came up to them.

“Going home.”

“Where do you belong?”

“Over there—at Oakland,” pointing in the direction of their home, which seemed suddenly to have moved a thousand miles away.

“Where have you been?” The other soldiers had come up now.

“Been down this way.” The boys’ voices were never so meek before. Each reply was like an apology.

“Been to see your brother?” asked one who had not spoken before—a pleasant looking fellow. The boys looked at him. They were paralyzed by dread of the approaching question.

“Now, boys, we know where you have been,” said a small fellow, who wore a yellow chevron on his arm. He had a thin mustache and a sharp nose, and rode a wiry, dull, sorrel horse. “You may just as well tell us all about it. We know you have seen them, and we are going to make you carry us where they are.”
